PREFACE.

THE object of this little compilation is to afford an additional amusement to those who live in the country, or who have access to gardens. That it is merely the elements of the Language of Flowers, must be obvious to every one; but if it should point out the way to any family, or circle of friends, to extend the design, it will have accomplished all expected from it.

It will be observed, that the emblem is generally taken from some real or supposed property of the plant, or from some poetical association, and thereby offers an opportunity of an agreeable nature, of becoming acquainted with the qualities of certain plants, and may probably lead to a more extended attention to the subject.

A party walking in a garden, through the means of flowers presented to each other, may carry on a conversation of compliment, wit, and repartee; and you may quarrel, reproach, or send letters of passion, friendship, civility, or even news.

A few Rules may be necessary: I or me is expressed by inclining the flower to the left; thou or thee, by sloping it to the right.

If a flower presented upright expresses a particular sentiment, when reversed it has a contrary meaning: Thus—a sprig of hawthorn, presented upright with its thorns and leaves, means, “I fear, but I hope.” If the same sprig is returned reversed, it means, “you must neither hope nor fear;” but if the thorns be stripped off, it expresses, “there is every thing to hope;" if deprived of its leaves, it signifies, "there is every thing to fear."

The amaryllis, which is the emblem of pride, may be made to express, "my pride is humbled," or "your pride is checked," by holding it downwards, either to the left or right, as the sense requires.

It is not difficult for any one to extend these rules, so as to embrace almost any subject. It will also be requisite to add emblems for the cardinal numbers, the months, &c. A little ingenuity will easily discover those most appropriate.
